A PURIM SUGGESTION—PAY YOUR FEDERATION DUES!

By Rabbi Ferdinand M. Isserman

The festival of Purim, which occurs to-day, commemorates Israel's rescue from the conspiracy of Haman as recorded in the book of Esther. As an expression of gratitude for that salvation the custom has arisen in Jewish circles to distribute charity. In Toronto to-day this festival comes in the nick of time. The Jewish community needs some reminder and some stimulus to make it aware of crying needs in its midst which must be met at once. Federation is struggling in the clutches of a deficit which is steadily growing larger. It has not been able to make its payments to it affiliated institutions. It was compelled to delay its assistance to the families on its list. Its overdraft at the bank at the present time is $5,000 and its debts to its affiliated organizations amount to more than $12,000. Thus the present deficit of Federation is $17,000. This fact is a Purim challenge to every Jew in Toronto.

Especially is this a challenge to the nine hundred and twenty-three subscribers to Federation who have not paid their pledges. These owe the organization at the present time almost eight thousand dollars. If these would pay their pledges at once, the crisis of Federation would be over. Of these nine hundred and twenty-three there are many who on Purim would wish to do some extra act of charity. To them we say, "Pay up your Federation dues at once. Let that be your schlachmones." Let that be your mitzvah. Do not wait to be asked! Do not wait for a worker to call on you to remind you of your duties! Observe the spirit of Purim by carrying out the pledge you have made to the poor of your community."

IS FEDERATION GOING BACKWARDS?

Many readers of the above editorial will wonder why Federation which had apparently been strengthening its position should now be faced with a deficit even larger than prior to last year's campaign. The reason is not a difficult one. Federation is going backward financially because it had no campaign this year. The experience of all charitable agencies is that campaigns for funds are essential every year. No matter how well organized an institution may be, it cannot do without the enthusiasm, the publicity and the stimulus which are the by-products of campaigns. Without a campaign for funds, even the strongest of Federations lose ground. The Philadelphia Federation, which may well be considered a model one and which raises annually more than one and a half million dollars, stages an annual campaign. Toronto's experience this year should teach Federation leaders the lesson that campaigns are essential to the growth of the institutions they are protecting. The few members of the Board who had the vision at the beginning of this year to urge a campaign were outvoted. We see now that it was an error not to have held a campaign. To-day we are faced with deficits. Some members of Federation are not paying their pledges. Some have reduced their subscriptions, and as a result innocent unfortunates suffer. The present budget of Federation calls for an annual ex-

THE TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF TORONTO HADASSAH

This Purim marks the tenth anniversary of the birth of Toronto Hadassah.

Observers who visit Palestine invariably bring back glowing reports of the work of Hadassah in that new land. The chaluzim who are exposing themselves to the severities and dangers of the pioneer life find conditions made bearable by the ministrations of Hadassah.

In Toronto Hadassah has come to be recognized as the most important Jewish organization in the city. By bringing the Zionist ideal home to its members it helps to give their life a content and a significance which lifts it above the futility of the existence of the mass of Jewish matronhood. Through Hadassah Jewish women are brought into contact with the creative forces in Jewish life.

Toronto Hadassah enjoys an enviable record of achievement in the various fields of Zionist endeavour. Several of the local leaders have set a standard of devotion to the cause, which is perhaps unparalleled in any sphere of communal work on the continent.

ADOPTING THE LATIN ALPHABET

A very significant news item was reported from Palestine last week: Ben Abi, the son of the famous Hebrew lexicographer, Ben Yehuda, has just published his second Hebrew book in Latin letters. This is apparently the spearhead of a movement in Hebrew aiming at the substitution of the popular Latin alphabet for the old Hebrew one.

Several months ago Dr. Chaim Zhitlowsky, the noted Jewish thinker, published a series of articles in the literary monthly, "Die Zukunft," advocating the adoption of the Latin alphabet in Yiddish. While recognizing the sentimental appeal of the Hebrew alphabet he set forth the practical advantages of making the Yiddish literature accessible to the mass of people who are imperfectly familiar with Yiddish but are deterred from achieving a reading knowledge by the barrier of the unfamiliar alphabet. We know that there are a number of people who possess but a limited acquaintance with German or French and nevertheless manage to read periodicals and literature in either language. Similarly there are a great many Jews who understand the spoken Yiddish, but make no effort to read its literature because of the utter dissimilarity of its alphabet with that of the languages which they use in school and life. In order to accomplish the purpose of bringing Jews closer to the language and literature which best reflect the main currents of their contemporary life, Zhitlowsky thinks it is worth sacrificing a mere sentimental consideration. When there is a conflict between romance and reality, the former must give way.

It hurts to give up cherished traditions and notions. But in the presence of the inexorable demands of life, we must be careful not to confuse the means with the end.

Hebrew as a classical language entombing classical literature need not concern itself with the utilitarian arguments of modern realists. But in Palestine, where it aspires to become a living tongue to serve the people in all possible situations, the factor of convenience

BOOKLET FOR INVESTORS

A new booklet, which Nesbitt, Thomson & Co., Limited, are sending out to investors all over Canada, should be useful and interesting to REVIEW readers. It is entitled "Our Heritage" and paints a true picture in words of the enormous possibilities for expansion in Canada. It tells how, through the development of natural resources, Canada will step into prominence not thought possible even a few years ago. It gives as the cycle: water power and natural resources, production, employment, markets; more employment, creating in its turn a larger market, and, equally important, agricultural development with a home market at its very doors, making the Dominion a profitable field for the investor.

Keren Hayesod Campaign Launched

Montreal Zionists launched their fifth annual drive for funds to aid in the upbuilding of Palestine at the dinner held in the ball room of the Mount Royal Hotel Monday, March 14. At the head table were: Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Sir Wyndham Deedes, A. J. Freiman, Louis Fitch, Mesdames A. Levine, and Louis Fitch, and Rabbi J. Berger, F. I. Spielman, Capt. W. Sebag-Montefiore, Joseph Cohen, K.C., Rabbi H. Abramowitz, Rabbi Zlotnik, A. Levin, R. A. Darwin, J. Kellert, Jos. Levinson, jr., Sol Kellert, S. Levinson, sr., J. Levinson, T. Glickman, S. Bronfman, H. Bronfman, Isaac Lande, D. Dunkelman, of Toronto. Speakers were: A. J. Freiman, of Ottawa, president of the Zionist Organization of Canada; Brig.-General Sir Wyndham Deedes, of London, former civil secretary of Palestine; and Dr. Chaim Weizmann, of London, president of the World Zionist Organization. Louis Fitch, vice-president of the Zionist Organization of Canada, presided.

Montreal's quota of $100,000 is the largest yet undertaken. It represents the lion's share of the Dominion objective for 1927 of $250,000. In previous years the objective for Canada has never been over $200,000. The United States 1927 objective is $7,500,000. $40,000 was contributed during the evening towards the quota of $100,000. Hadassah donated $10,000.

Dr. Chaim Weizmann, president of the World Zionist Movement, whose address came to a close about 1 a.m., said, in part:

"Out of Palestine we can get a modest but clean living. It is a hard, stiff-necked soil, requiring energy and devotion to conquer. Palestine is not likely to have any millionaires, but it is not likely to have any slums. The beginnings of a social order are there. And, remember, the whole thing is eight years old. In results you have got your money's worth. You have given money; others have given their flesh and blood. Of course, the building up of Palestine is a difficult thing. If it were easy others would have gone into it, not we.

"This world, the non-Jewish, Christian world, to which you have said: 'You have always oppressed us; you have

Benjamin Steinberg, a real boy-prodigy of 10, made an impressive début in New York. His violin recital, proceeds of which will defray further expenses of instruction revealed a technique beyond his years, a certainty, a rhythmic gracefulness that is inherent in the born musician. Metropolitan critics are unanimous in their praise of the lad and predict a great future for him.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Jewish Deputies in London, a survey of the present situation of the Jews in Roumania was submitted by the Joint Foreign Committee and the Alliance Israelite Universelle, headed by Lucien Wolf, venerable leader of British Jews. The report shows that a thorough investigation has been made, revealing that no real official attempt is being made by the Roumanian government to check Jew-baiting.

The War Department of Poland has just promoted forty Jewish privates to the rank of reserve lieutenants.

The rotogravure section of a New York newspaper carries the picture of a bearded gentleman in uniform, looking regal if a little absurd. He is the Grand Duke Nicolai Nicolaevitch, grandson of Czar Nicholas I, who is now living quietly near Paris and has been proclaimed by a group of Russian émigrés as a leader of a future peasant revolution against Bolshevism. Several months ago 500 Russian émigrés of the monarchist school made a pilgrimage to his home at the Chateau de Choigny as though to an acknowledged emperor. Some of them may still be recognized by the world as aristocrats, some of them are clerks, taxi-drivers, porters, dressmakers. In exile it pleases them to refer to some one as His Majesty; it gives them something to hold to in a topsy-turvy world. Wherever these exiles are they must ask hospitality. But there are other Russian exiles, absent from the congress of émigrés which did honour to the Grand Duke, who, if they accept hospitality, are giving far more than they can ever be paid for. These are the émigrés of intellect and talent who left Russia after the Soviet revolution, artists, musicians, writers. To them belongs credit for the spread of the Russian novel, ballet and theatre. As they have enriched the world's culture so does their absence impoverish Russia. All Russian exiles have not set their hopes on a return of the monarchist state. What thousands of them want is a liberal government of the majority in Russia and a consequent return of a great rich stream which flowed out of the country.

A perturbed lady writes to say that she was invited to a luncheon given by an orthodox friend and was amazed to find on the menu cream of tomato soup with chicken salad with ice cream and that she would never, never go again. No, never. It is to be hoped that, if she wants to go to luncheons much, this good lady will let her investigation rest with her letter to the REVIEW. For orthodox Jewish people have many inconsistencies. One is to profess outwardly piety and observance and to fail to live up to the profession. In many a home the meat that lies in salt is not the only kind eaten by the inhabitants. It is often kosher brisket at home and ham and potato salad downtown. Remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy is not always indicated by two sets of kitchenware and towels to go with them. The man who insists on abstinence from smoking on Saturday thinks that's enough without closing his place of business. Jews who will fight to the death in conversation for the supremacy of orthodoxy decide that it is all right to ride on Shabbas so long as they don't write or pick flowers. And how? But that remains among the mysteries. Inconsistency and hypocrisy are old partners and if it isn't ice cream and chicken hobnobbing together at the table, it is most likely some other infringement from the orthodox point of view. That any one should be so shocked at it these days is more surprising than the infringement itself.

The American Israelite of Cincinnati, commenting upon a recent Every Friday on Jewish publicity-seeking organizations, says: "The editor of the REVIEW might have added a number more, for example, the local congregations, societies, etc. It not only never occurs to these to use the advertising columns of the Jewish papers for any purpose, but the fewest of them ever think of acknowledging in any way the services rendered. In some cities the local congregations advertise their services and the subjects of their sermons in the daily papers, as paid matter, of course, never in the Jewish. Altogether the Jewish periodicals receive little or no support from the Jewish organizations."

What the Israelite says does not obtain entirely with regard to the CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW. This paper gets more support from Federation, Zionist and Hadassah organizations and many societies than any other English-Jewish paper published in America. It can complain only of the congregations which neither advertise nor ever return one single word of thanks for the regular weekly space they are given; and of imported go-getters who want space free on their good looks when they themselves won't give a nickel's worth of their time for nothing. The REVIEW is a bright and scintillating example to all English-Jewish papers which complain that they are imposed upon. It refuses to be an easy mark and is known as anything but. If the papers across the border would put the proper valuation upon their space, they too could enjoy a state of independence. f.f.c.

The bride, gowned in white chiffon velvet, with veil in cap style caught with orange blossoms and seed pearls, with silver shoes, carrying her bouquet of lilies-of-the-valley, orchids and Sweet heart roses, was accompanied down an aisle lined with palms and ferns by her mother and father, with her matron of honour, Mrs. Stein, her sister, and another sister, Miss Shirley Wright, maid of honour, and her twelve attendants, Misses Rose Cohen, Rose Wright, Belle Liebivetz, Esther Buchalter, Freda Green and Ann Mandell; and Barney Wright, George Feldman, William Ginsberg (Toronto), Harry Beube, Phil Liebovitz and Abe Stringer. The lady attendants were in orchid coloured taffeta, silver head bandeaux and carried bouquets of American Beauty roses. At the altar, illuminated by vari-coloured lights, the groom, with his mother and father, and Leo Back, of Toronto, as best man, was in waiting. The ceremony was performed by Rabbi Werner, of Congregation Beth Jacob, assisted by Rabbi S. Levin and Rabbi Halpern with Cantor Levinson. An orchestra played the wedding music. At dinner toasts were proposed and responded to by Rabbi Werner, William Ainslie, Rabbi Levin, Mrs. Lily M. Hipkins, James Cochran, the bride's father, Solomon Wright, and the brother of the groom, A. Cohen, of Toronto. Among congratulatory telegrams was one from Moscow, Russia, where a cousin, S. Ex-Bankrupt Pays 45 Non-Legal Creditors

Forty-five creditors—without legal standing—of David V. Picker, now a vice-president in some of the motion picture enterprises of Marcus Loew, will receive checks totalling $30,000. It is Mr. Picker's gift to them and, incidentally, to himself. He declares he never has been contented since, in 1913, he was wiped out by a strike in the clothing trade.

During the thirteen years that have passed he has gradually been paying off a debt that at first was $100,000. He is under no legal compulsion to do so—the creditors gave receipts in full when, a few months after the crash, he offered and paid them fifty cents on the dollar. The other $50,000 he has been paying in small bits from time to time. Now he is able to write checks for $30,000 of this sum that remains.

Several of the creditors are banks, some are wholesale houses and other corporations. It is not generally believed that such concerns have much sentiment in business matters. Mr. Picker, however, is receiving letters from many of them thanking him for his checks and pointing out that he is an example of honesty to the entire business community.

The bankruptcy laws have been widely criticized in recent years. It has been demonstrated that their original intention, to give relief to business men in trouble so that they may start out unhandicapped, has almost been lost sight of. Instead, the laws are used for the purpose of "crooked busts" whereby goods are bought in large quantities from wholesalers, sold for a profit and the assets concealed so that a bankruptcy action may be started.

Mr. Picker's determination to pay off his debt is the other extreme and one that is making credit managers believe there is, after all, a Santa Claus. He is now only moderately well to do. The $30,000 represents the first surplus money that has been available. Back of it is $12,000 borrowed thirteen years ago on a life insurance policy and used as the basis for a new start.

Mr. Picker has charge of the real estate operations of the Loew motion picture companies. When a new theatre is being considered he investigates the site and when it is eventually built he determines the rentals to be charged for stores and other surplus space. His work takes him throughout the country. After he has finished supervising the mailing of the present checks he is to start out on another trip to the West.

In 1913 the suit manufacturing company that he owned was clearing from $10,000 to $20,000 profit a year. It sold to jobbers and to wholesale houses on a credit basis. Then came a prolonged strike. Deliveries could not be made. The jobbers, unable to get additional goods, declined in some instances to pay for those they had received. Mr. Picker could not collect his bills payable and finally was forced to appeal to his creditors.

There were the usual formal hearings. Some of the creditors insisted on bankruptcy proceedings. Others pointed out that through such action they would get only a few cents for each dollar of indebtedness. Mr. Picker was anxious to avoid bankruptcy, believing it contrary to the belief of many of his competitors, almost a disgrace. He said he would agree to pay within a few months fifty cents on the dollar. This was far more than immediate court action would have netted and the creditors consented.

It was not easy to get the $50,000 needed. The first problem was to find a new business—the strike was still in progress—from which the funds might be obtained. Mr. Picker studied the problem several days and then decided that the motion picture theatre was a rich field. He knew nothing about motion pictures and less about the proper manner in which to operate a theatre.

He found that the Berlin Theatre in the Bronx could be leased and he borrowed $12,000 on his life insurance.

Now he has offices at No. 1540 Broadway in the Loew Theatre Building. He is frankly willing to tell of his successful struggle to win out. At that time, he said, the movie theatres were content to show any variety of pictures to their patrons. None of the owners had any idea about entertainment values.

"There weren't many films then," he said, "and, as far as I know, the men who ran the theatres did not take the trouble to see the films they showed. They were mostly two-reelers. I insisted on a dollar's worth of entertainment for each dollar spent. And it paid. I opened up the Berlin Theatre in May of 1914, and in six or seven months I had made enough so that I could borrow more and pay $50,000 off on my total liabilities of $100,000.

"The more I pay now the less I shall have to pay then," Mr. Picker told his creditors. "I intend to pay up in full, and when I do it will be the happiest day of my life."

Mr. Picker's prosperity grew with the increasing prosperity of the motion picture business. He acquired an interest in several other theatres and eventually became associated with Marcus Loew, who now has theatres in all parts of the world.

When his clothing business failed, Mr. Picker had more than eight creditors

...ith. The ... will be a ... pre-exilic ... It will be ... in every sense of the term. We trust it will be ultra-modern. It will adumbrate the future which we hope society in its progress is destined to attain. It will serve as an archetype of modern social organization.

Under such conditions it is conceivable that modern Hebrew will seek to escape from its alphabetical insulation, and expose itself to contacts with outside languages and literatures. In this respect we have the example of modern German, which is casting aside its Gothic raiments in favor of the popular Latin vestments.

We do not intend to attempt a full discussion of all the arguments pro and contra. It is conceivable that the mass of public opinion will condemn Ben Abi's innovation. To us it seems to be a healthy sign of the modernness and courageousness of the Jewish spirit in Palestine—the spirit which regards Palestine as the land of the future rather than the land of the past.—A.B.B.

NAHUM SOKOLOW IN PARIS

A banquet was tendered to Nahum Sokolow, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Zionist Organization, by the Franco-Palestinian Organization in Paris. A number of prominent men of political circles in Paris, including a representative of M. Briand, were present. M. Justin Godard, President of the Association, announced in the course of the dinner that a chair of modern Hebrew would be instituted next year at the Paris School of Modern Oriental Languages. Mr. Sokolow was also received in audience by M. Doumergue, President of the French Republic. M. Doumergue was particularly interested in the revival of the Hebrew language in Palestine.

At a reception given to him in London, which was presided over by Sir Herbert Samuel, Lord Allenby paid a glowing tribute to the work which men like Sokolow have accomplished for the upbuilding of Palestine. Mr. Sokolow took occasion of criticising English Jews for their lukewarm response to appeals for Zionist funds.

"A Quart a Day"

Think of the energy in a quart of City Dairy Milk. The arithmetic is astonishing—more food value than eight eggs, three-quarters of a pound of steak, or two pounds of potatoes. NOW—compare the price.

Is it any wonder our customers use more and more MILK and less of other food?

Doctors are advising us to drink more milk. Dr. Charles Hastings has urged it for years—he says "Every child should have at least a quart a day."

We invite you to take advantage of our service—Milk that is Pure, Clean, RICH—always. Phone the Health Number, TRinity 2040.

Editor,
CANADIAN JEWISH REVIEW.

Kindly allow me a few lines in your worthy magazine to make known to your readers the splendid work that is being carried on by the Toronto Jewish Old Folks' Home. There are forty persons in the Home, and some of them incurable who should be in an institution for the purpose, but as there is not a home of that kind in Toronto the Old Folks' Home admitted them and is doing everything possible to lessen their pain and anguish. Since the founding of the Home nine years ago we have also admitted annually an average of eighty outdoor patients, including immigrants, jobless and homeless people, many of whom were sheltered for [illegible] That is not our work and still we did it and are still doing it whenever possible. Don't you think the Home deserves more support than it is getting now? It is the duty of every Jew to help an institution of this kind. A great additional expense is necessary to care for the incurables and outdoor patients. Much money is needed to feed, clothe and shelter all the old folks, and as Purim is approaching and every Jew sends presents to some other, we hope and trust that you will not forget the helpless aged who are waiting for your help.

Sincerely,
D. BROWN.

Toronto, March 12, 1927.

Dear Sir:

It has come to the notice of the Mothers' and Babes' Summer Rest Home committee that a statement is being passed around our community to the effect that an offer for affiliation with Federation which entails a grant of $3,500 was refused by our committee.

Since such an offer has never been officially made to us, we therefore would appreciate it if your Board would make a public statement to that effect. We are most desirous to avoid an unnecessary controversy on the matter, but feel that something must be done in order that the concert we are giving in Massey Hall on Wednesday evening, April 6, in aid of our summer work will not suffer.

We are,
Respectfully yours,
Mrs. Samuel Yolles,
Acting Chairman,
Mrs. Evelyn Wolfe,
Secretary.

March 15, 1927.

Dear Mrs. Yolles:

In reply to yours of March 12 addressed to the secretary of the Federation wherein you requested a statement from the Federation of Jewish grant of $3,500 from the Federation to the Rest Home, I have been instructed by the Board of Trustees of the Federation to make the following reply:

The Federation of Jewish Philanthropies of Toronto has on no occasion made any offer of any sum to the Mothers' and Babes' Rest Home for its maintenance and particularly was no such offer of $3,500 made to the Rest Home this year.

Sincerely yours,
Joseph A. Woolf,

The Paris Ghetto

By MORRIS LEE JACOBS

Every tourist in Paris knows Rue de Rivoli. This thoroughfare, with its endless procession of arcades, balconies and specialty shops, travels east from Place de la Concorde. Rue de Rivoli is the soul of Paris, the effloresence of the French creative genius—sculpture, painting, landscape-gardening, drama, music, beautiful leisure, divine idleness—all finding their highest expression in the exquisite statuary of Les Jardins des Tuileries.

Strangely enough when I recall the splendors of Rue de Rivoli, I think of the Parisian Ghetto. The two are associated by contrast as well as by proximity. The place where Paris Jewry had its inception more then a century ago and where Jewish history was made is near the extreme east end of Rue de Rivoli, a little to the south. Yet it contains no hint of the magnificence that is barely beyond its walls. There are no architectural flourishes, no apparent attempts at beautifying the streets and courtyards. Its buildings suggest interiors that have only the barest necessities for home comfort.

The narrow, tortuous streets are flanked by grocery stores that have not in the least changed with the migration of their owners from Eastern European countries. The palates of the Ghetto-dwellers do not become assimilated. The products of Jewish grocery stores every where are universal.

Kosher butcher shops are second in importance among industries in the Paris ghetto.

The shop fronts and walls of houses are posted with Yiddish placards announcing theatrical performances in the various music halls of the neighbourhood. Concerts of purely Jewish music are among the events announced.

Scattered here and there among the grocery stores and butcher shops are a goodly number of book stalls, well stocked with literature of Jewish interest. Siddurim and Machzorim in excellent binding and with fine French translations may be purchased here. Yiddish newspapers have a large sale. A tallith imported from Vienna and a good pair of tefillin also may be found in the bookshops. But it is to be feared that they eventually will be placed among the Jewish relics in the Semitic division of the Louvre. Our French brethren are no lovers of religious ceremonial objects.

Perhaps most characteristic of the Paris ghetto are the Jewish restaurants. These, all purporting in bold letters upon their windows to be strictly kosher, are rarely inviting. Most of them are hardly more than niches in the wall, and are as often to be found in the rear of houses as facing the street. They are dark and their ceilings low. No dearth of aqualor here, and the doors emanating from the rear kitchen permanently saturate these places with a stale stench. On the Sabbath or holidays, the menu is a complete history of Jewish culinary art.

It is in these restaurants that the Jews of the Fourth Arrondissement congregate and discuss passionately the affairs of the day, particularly as they affect their brethren in Poland, Russia and Roumania. Here they are seen eagerly absorbing their Yiddish papers. Their excitement, particularly upon the appearance of a new issue of their favorite journal, is a rare spectacle, infinitely more arresting than the stir that prevails on the upper steps of the Bourse when millions of shares of stocks change hands.

It was in Rue Pavée, the Ghetto street most easily reached from Rue de Rivoli, that I made my bow to the Jewish section of Paris, one Friday evening in August. I was accompanied by a non-Jewish fellow-traveller. The Ghetto had cleaned house for the Sabbath and had an orderly, almost solemn, appearance. The week-day bustle had ceased. Jewry was walking leisurely, mostly in the gutters.

All spoke Yiddish, interspersed with occasional phrases in the vernacular.

I and my companion entered a kosher restaurant which appeared cleaner than the others, a typical Polish setting nicely reproduced in the Fourth Arrondissement of the French capital.

Monsieur Rosenzweig, the proprietor and social arbiter, was extremely solicitous. He was a man in his sixties, middle-height, enormously corpulent, somewhat stooped and wearing a cap slightly tilted. He was everywhere in his restaurant, greeting newcomers and chatting with his guests.

We did not escape his notice. Tapping my friend on the shoulder, he bade him "Gut Shabbas." Seeing us smile, he regarded me fixedly, pointed his finger to the copper-coloured head of my Irish friend, and asked: "Aussi un juif?"

"No," I replied. "A friend, a goy."

He then questioned me about America, our professions, our impressions of France—all in a most amiable and interested manner.

At the adjoining table sat a lone Roumanian Jew. He had been dividing his attention between his meal and his paper. Getting acquainted is much more easily accomplished in Paris than in New York and soon we were exchanging confidences with our neighbour.

He recounted to us some of the legends of the neighbourhood. The Paris ghetto, like every Jewish community, has developed a stock of local stories and humour. It seems that Monsieur Rosenzweig, himself, is the subject of one of the favorite tales of the district.

Some twenty years earlier, our narrator told us, Monsieur Rosenzweig was conducting a profitable establishment on these same premises. Among his guests were many of his countrymen, young Roumanians, who ate at his expense. They were rich in hopes but poor in francs. But what did a few francs more or less mean to Monsieur Rosenzweig? He had no family and, indeed, this enormous, loquacious and sociable gentleman was too timid to speak to a woman on the subject of matrimony.

Wonder of wonders! One evening, Monsieur Rosenzweig suddenly announced to his guests that on the morrow he would be married to the tailor's widow. He invited them all to be present at his wedding in the synagogue and at a grand repast which was to follow.

But the next day, something incomprehensible, mysterious happened. Monsieur and his bride approached the altar between empty rows of seats. Not one of the good man's dear friends was there.

And only Monsier and Madame and their two witnesses were present at the wedding feast.

For days afterwards Monsieur waited at the door of his restaurant for guests who did not come, while Madame sat at the cash register, which did not ring.

Finally he forced an explanation from one of the friends who had deserted him.

"Why did you marry the widow?" the friend began.

"I do not understand," Monsieur Rosenzweig responded.

"Her husband was a tailor—we were his customers. Formerly, not to be seen on the street where she lived, we made lengthy detours. Do you think then, that at this late date, twice a day, we are going to run the risk of being asked to pay our debts, and at meal time?"

When our narrator had finished his story, it was the middle of the evening. He concluded his tale with a recitation of grace. Then the three of us departed.

Many of our brethren were still strolling as before, in the gutters. Others were standing in doorways debating and gesticulating.

By ten o'clock the neighbourhood began to grow silent. Groups were scattering. Soon the ghetto was asleep.

Ex-Bankrupt Pays

They were scattered in various parts of the country. His accountant at the time was Leo Lewisohn. Mr. Lewisohn cast his lot with Mr. Picker and followed him into the hazardous business of running motion picture theatres. Now he is Mr. Picker's personal accountant and is bustling about sending out checks in payment of the last $30,000.

"Strangely enough," said Mr. Picker, "it wasn't easy to find all of the creditors. Some have died in the last thirteen years and in these cases I had to run down their heirs. I was worried, thinking it was possible that they might be in want. To all the debts that I owed in 1913 I have added 50 per cent. This represents the interest that the money would have earned in a savings bank."

The only flaw in Mr. Picker's otherwise entirely satisfied state of mind is that one creditor, entitled to $56, has not yet been found. Mr. Lewisohn is gallantly attempting to remedy this misfortune and both men are confident that the missing man will yet be found and the last cent of debt cleared up.

"I shall always probably owe $12,000, though," said Mr. Picker. "I thought the $12,000 I borrowed on my life insurance was a lucky debt. So I never pay it back. I keep renewing it from time to time and pay the interest on it. This is the happiest time of my life. I never could feel, while I owed this money, that I had a right to anything but necessities. Now I shall be able to enjoy some luxuries. I don't see what there is for people to make a fuss about. I owed that money and I'm paying it. That's all there is to it."

Dr. Albert Einstein, world-famous physicist, has expressed his desire to co-operate with scientific institutions in Soviet Russia. That the Moscow government welcomes this proffer is indicated by the fact that Dr. M. Grauner, close associate of Einstein, has been granted permission to pursue research in Russian schools of higher learning. Prof. Einstein and Prof. Albert Michelson of Chicago, have just been made members of the All-Russian Academy of Sciences.

ICA COLONIES IN RUSSIA

At a recent meeting of the Council of the ICA held at Paris, it was decided to grant fresh credit for the development of its Russian colonies, where it hopes to settle an additional one thousand families. Increased support will be given to professional education and special attention will be directed toward the development of the loan banks, which have proved of such great importance to the agricultural population. Several of the Jewish co-operative colonies have won distinction at exhibitions of dairy products and the vineyards in the neighbourhood of Ekaterinoslav have received prizes at exhibitions.

It was brought out recently that on account of the new electoral laws in Russia many Jewish farmers will become disfranchised. In White Russia there is a most desirable state of harmonious co-operation between the Jewish and non-Jewish electors. Non-Jews and Jews vote for each other's candidates, in spite of the activity of anti-semitic agitators.

An agreement entered into among the three organizations, the Ica, the Hias and the Russian Emigration Committee, has been signed for co-operation in the work of aiding Jewish emigrants. The annual budget was agreed to be $166,000, of which the Hias was to contribute $100,000 and the Ica the remaining $66,000.

Florence Stern, young California violinist, known from coast to coast as a highly gifted performer, gave a recital in New York last week, demonstrating conclusively that she deserves to be ranked with the leading violinists now before American audiences.
